A VALUABLE WORK for RAIL-ROAD ENGINEERS—MIFFLIN ON RAILWAY CURVES AND TANGENGS.—This is a small but learned work on Practical Engineering, by Samuel W. Mifflin, C. E. It treats of the methods of describing and adjusting Railway Curves and Tangenta, as practiced by the Engineers of Pennsylvania. All difficult caculations are dispensed with, and even tabular statements, and the author states that "there is nothing in it which may not be remembered by an axistant after a short practice." The price is $1. Published by DANIELS & SMITH, Philadelphia.

We cannot mention a single book that will compare in soul harrowing interest with this, unquestionably, the best of G. W. M. Reynold's books. The scenes are tirdling in the extreme; the characters holdly drawn and admirably contrasted—the good with the bad. There is not a solitary paragraph that does not tend to the development of the hornible mystery that, like a bhood stained pail, enhanced the become in its heavy folds from the filed chapter of the tale. Numerous engravings, of uncommon excellence, illustrate many of the extraordnary incidents a blick see "Contrasted".

WILSON & TROW'S NEW-YORK
CITY DIRECTORY.—In consequence of the numerous complaints of inaccuracies and defects in the New-York City Directory for the last two years, the abovementioned were induced to undertake the complation of a satisfactory work. In doing this, they commenced an enterprise to be continued through a sories of years; and their relisance for the patronage of the public is placed upon the completeness, the accuracy and the excellence of their work.

Their first New-York City Directory will be published early this week. This is nearly three weeks earlier than the work has ever before been published. In its complisation merely, one hundred and twenty men have been employed night and day, since May I, with the exception of Sundays. Such a large force has never, in any other instance, been employed upon a Directory of this City. From the time that the copy was ready, eighty printers have been constantly employed in putting it in type. When published, it will be found to contain not only more on each page, but nearly one hundred pages more than any former work.

They might have get out a book earlier, and with the e'd of a less rowerful force; but it could have been done only at the sacrifice of accuracy and completeness.

They offer, therefore, their work to the public early this week, as a complete, accurate and reliable one.

New-York, May Si, 1832.
